

Copy the Stars!

There are multiple types of lack of clarity. Similar to out of the tar pits 3 categories:

1. required, what is inherent in being in a new domain
2. incidental: accepted lack of clarity, kind of like clarity debt - we dont want to take the time to clarify it
3. accidental, clarity that is lacking because you have not taken the time or energy to eliminate it. Either lack of knowledge of the need to do something, or lack of care

Sometimes we need to accept lack of clarity and become better at living in it, other times we must seek to reduce it

many of us get demotivated when we do not have clarity, procrastination abounds extra work created confusion remains

Teamwork -> Communication and planning issues impact motivation and outcomes

Hard to reason about issues in distributed workflows and systems

Poor prioritisation is responsible for a lot of confusion

